Program Director, “Finding Common Ground” project (7/98-present)

Oversee research, coordination and supervision of project activities for national reproductive health policy project studying the practical impact of growing tensions between health policies concerned with the health of women and those concerned with the health of their children. We are assessing how emerging state welfare and related social programs integrate or separate children's and women's needs and interests. Research activities have involved coordination and implementation of two 50-state surveys; statistical modeling and analysis of national administrative and policy data; organization and conduct of state case studies (WA, TX); design and implementation of clinic- and agency-based survey protocols in Texas and New York, as well as various other research activities. Contribute to grant and report writing; hire and supervise research assistants; liaison with Institutional Review Board and other academic bodies; responsible for project financial management.

Research Fellow, "Contraceptive Decision-Making" project (9/94-9/97)

Recipient of a doctoral fellowship from the National Institutes of Health to collaborate on an NIH-funded research project entitled "Decision-Making Regarding Norplant Use and Discontinuation." This was a multicenter, longitudinal study on contraception decision-making among a population of predominantly Hispanic and African American women. Methods of contraception studied included Norplant, Depo-Provera, oral contraceptives, and sterilization. Involved in multiple facets of the project including initial fieldwork (bilingual recruitment, eligibility screening, face-to-face and telephone interviewing for various rounds of the survey, and validation of interviews); complex data cleaning of multiple data sets, programming and analysis in SPSS for Windows, report writing.
